Building a winning organization depends on good chemistry—
that intangible quality that brings out the best in everyone. At the University of Hartford we have all of the elements to create the right formula: bright, motivated students; a distinguished faculty; engagement in the community and the world; healthy investment to enhance our physical environment; and strong support from our alumni.

Alumni support was a major factor in raising $13.5 million in contributions in fiscal year 2006, a 20 percent increase over the previous year. Contributions came from about 700 new alumni donors, and giving by faculty and staff also increased significantly. This growing support from those who share a connection to the University is especially meaningful.

Our alumni speak passionately about their undergraduate years and their close interaction with dedicated faculty. This spirit of commitment to our students is one of our trademarks, and it will remain at the heart of everything we do. It will also inform our new initiatives in graduate and professional education.

In order to strengthen our graduate programs, we named Peter Diffley last summer as the first full-time dean of graduate studies. Peter comes to us from the University of Notre Dame, where he was a leader in graduate education as associate dean of the graduate school since 1990.

We added to our graduate offerings earlier in the summer by introducing a program leading to a Master of Fine Arts in Illustration. Renowned illustrator Murray Tinkelman directs the Hartford Art School program, which enables successful illustrators from throughout the country to enhance their skills and further their careers.

Last year we received an anonymous $600,000 grant to support a new master’s degree program in the College of Education, Nursing and Health Professions that will be introduced in early 2007. The Aural Habilitation and Education of Hearing-Impaired Children program will train educators to use technology that allows children to hear and speak more normally. This will be the only such program offered in Connecticut and one of only two in New England.

As we concentrate on this new initiative in graduate education, we also need to think globally to ensure that our academic programs produce graduates at every level who understand the world in which they will live and work. Toward this end, we are expanding our international programs and involvement.

Walter Harrison
We welcomed 110 new students this fall from 37 countries. All told, approximately 325 undergraduate and graduate students from 62 foreign countries are studying at the University, and they enrich our culture immensely. At the same time, more of our American students are studying abroad. This past year, 221 University students did so, and we plan to double that number within five years.

Recognizing the importance of international experience, the Barney School of Business is placing a new emphasis on global study. A group of MBA students got a firsthand look last summer at what it takes to do business abroad. Led by Terri Albert, associate professor of marketing, they went to the Czech Republic for five intense days of visits to Czech companies and meetings with Americans doing business there.

Just as important as international outreach to our future development is our engagement with our neighbors. Locally, our students and faculty are involved in tutoring, teaching, and educational development at our two magnet schools, University High School of Science and Engineering and University of Hartford Magnet School. Great teaching is a hallmark of these schools, just as it is of the University.

University High School received a visit from U.S. Sen. Christopher Dodd of Connecticut last January to promote legislation aimed at making the nation more competitive in science and technology. Teachers and students from the high school participated in a roundtable discussion with Senator Dodd. Two months later, University High sophomore Joshua Tagore testified before a Senate subcommittee on the need for more federal support for math, science, and technology education.

These schools are just one way we make a positive impact on the Hartford area. In the Educational Main Street (EMS) program, 414 students volunteered as tutors at nine schools in Hartford in the 2005–06 academic year, up from 326 in the previous year. The EMS program received a $90,000 grant from Prudential Financial and a $25,000 donation from The Hartford Financial Services Group.

The Hartt School Community Division has opened a new branch in Simsbury, Conn., that is bringing performing arts education programs to families in the Farmington Valley.

The University’s Center for Social Research is studying vulnerable families in Hartford with the support of a $1 million, three-year grant...
New Leadership. The men’s basketball team is looking forward to a successful season with new head coach Dan Leibovitz, who was hired last April. A former assistant coach at Temple University, Leibovitz says the Hawks will come out strong, with their eyes on a slot in the NCAA Tournament.

Global Networking. Donald Ellis, professor in the School of Communication, is the author of Transforming Conflict: Communication and Ethnopolitical Conflict. Ellis was a 2006–07 academic fellow at the Foundation for the Defense of Democracies in Washington, D.C., which is dedicated to defending democratic societies against terrorism. He also traveled to Israel for lectures by academics, diplomats, and military officials from India, Israel, Jordan, Turkey, and the United States.

International Opportunities. Sawsan Awwad and her husband, Daif, traveled here from Nazareth, Israel, to attend graduate school. They were two of 325 international students studying here in 2005–06. At the same time, 221 University students studied abroad last year.

Just Imagine. Katelyn Walker ’07 (left), Natasha Stewart ’09 (center), and Hannah Chase ’09 already have designs on a room in the University’s newest residence hall. Scheduled to open in August 2007, the five-story hall will look out on a new plaza that will serve as a vibrant center of student life.
Global Emphasis. A new focus at the Barney School is to provide more international academic experiences for its students. Associate Professor of Marketing Terri Albert’s trip to the Czech Republic is the first MBA class to provide an international travel component. At right, the class pauses in front of Prague Castle.

Tutors and Mentors. Founded in 1990, Educational Main Street is a partnership between the University of Hartford and nine public schools in Hartford’s North End. Thanks to generous support from donors like Prudential Financial, University students tutor more than 5,000 children in the classroom and after school. Working together at Fox Middle School are (from left) Jacqueline Nappi ’09; eighth-graders Morgan Mitchell, Shauniqua Blake, Thomas Cruz, and Patricia Pipkin (seated); Andrew Mitchell ’09 (standing); and José Ward ’09 (seated). from the Connecticut Children’s Trust Fund. The funding will allow the center to assess the effectiveness of home visitation services in strengthening parenting practices.

Here on campus, we are expanding support for women’s education and leadership by converting the assets of Hartford College for Women into two initiatives that will carry on that college’s legacy. The first of these is the Center for Professional Development, formerly called The Career Counseling Center, which continues to provide women and men with services in career counseling, entrepreneurial and job training, and continuing education. The second initiative is the Women’s Education and Leadership Fund (WELFund), which will provide grants to support women’s education and leadership opportunities across the University. Jennifer Sanborn has joined the University as the first director of this fund.

While education is an intangible product, the process of educating requires good infrastructure, another of the essential elements in our formula. This past year we have made a commitment to the future of the University by completing some construction projects and beginning new ones.

Last December we all received a wonderful holiday present with the completion of the Integrated Science, Engineering, and Technology (ISET) complex—on time and on budget. The complex is the equal of any science and engineering facility in the nation. We believe that ISET is already having an effect on our science enrollments. The College of Arts and Sciences reported this fall that the number of incoming students who are majoring in physics, biology, chemistry, and chemistry-biology is up almost 15 percent over last year’s count.

We also completed construction of the first phase of the Home Field Advantage campaign to provide new athletic fields on campus. The baseball team inaugurated its new field on March 29 with a victory over the University of Massachusetts, as baseball returned to campus for the first time since 1985. The new softball field made its debut a few days later. Part of the funding for these facilities came this fall from a challenge grant offered by the prestigious Kresge Foundation. Under the terms of the grant, the University raised the final $2.8 million in private dollars in order to receive $700,000 from the foundation. We are grateful to each of the more than 800 donors who made these facilities possible by helping us raise $6.8 million for the overall project.

In June we broke ground for a $5 million, 15,000-square-foot addition to the Hartford Art School. We named the new space The Renée Samuels Center in honor of our longtime art school supporter and trustee and University regent. Renée and her husband, Bob, and their children have pledged the lead gift of $1.2 million for the project, scheduled for completion in March 2007. The facility will house two growing programs, photography and media arts, and will allow students to explore the potential of digital technology in a space that promotes interaction among a variety of artistic disciplines, such as painting, drawing, and printmaking.

The Big Dance. After an amazing 27-win season, the women’s basketball team won its third America East Championship in five years. The Hawks followed that with a University first by beating Temple University, 64-58, in the first round of the NCAA Division I Women’s Basketball Tournament.

Distinguished Faculty. In July, Michael F. Robinson, assistant professor of history at Hillyer College, was a guest on Cincinnati Public Radio, where he talked about his new book, The Coldest Crucible: Arctic Exploration and American Culture. The Sunday Times of London included it in its list of notable books in the Aug. 13 issue.

A New Molecule. Undergraduate research students under the direction of Associate Professor of Chemistry Laura Pence have created a new molecule—a compound containing ruthenium, a metal similar to iron. It is one of several molecules the group has worked on to identify a standardized method for preparing and purifying this type of ruthenium-containing cluster.
Bright Ideas. Created to provide new energy solutions that are cheap, reliable, and friendly to the environment, the University’s Clean Energy Institute partners engineering students and faculty with industrial, state, and federal clients. Senior engineering students (from left) Shalane Regan, Alan Mitchell, Ben Young, and Amar Bhakta, with Assistant Professor Tom Filburn (foreground), hold samples of the reflective Mylar that coats a parabolic solar collector they are evaluating for client Lite Trough LLC. The work is supported by a grant from Connecticut Innovations.

Outstanding Alumnus. Jason Socrates Bardi ’95 has written The Calculus Wars: Newton, Leibniz, and the Greatest Mathematical Clash of All Time. Bardi is now a science writer/editor at the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases of the National Institutes of Health.
Long-Awaited Dream. Hartford Art School Dean Power Boothe announced at the groundbreaking for The Renée Samuels Center (left) that the center will “make a great art school look like a great art school.” Renée and Bob Samuels (above) and their children gave the lead gift for this addition to Taub Hall.

Hartford Scholars. Peter Stevens, president of JCJ Architecture, presented Elizabeth Rodriguez, a Hartford Scholar majoring in sociology and criminal justice, with the $1,000 Mayor’s Scholar Award at the annual Hartford Scholars dinner in June. The event raised more than $100,000 for the program, which provides half-tuition scholarships at the University for Hartford high school graduates.

Poet Laureate. Last spring the Cardin Reading Series brought the 2003–04 U.S. Poet Laureate, Louise Glück, to campus. The Pulitzer Prize-winning poet is a prolific author whose work has been repeatedly recognized with national poetry awards. She is also the recipient of fellowships from the Guggenheim and Rockefeller foundations and the National Endowment for the Arts.
Construction is progressing on a new residence hall for first-year students. The project is scheduled for completion by fall 2007. This will be the largest dormitory construction project since completion of the Park River Apartments in 1989. This project and the renovation of our oldest residence halls, which began this summer, will add some 300 beds to campus. We will also bring University students to downtown Hartford next fall to live in the new Temple Street townhouses being constructed this year.

One of our most ambitious building projects will transform a former auto dealership in Hartford into a teaching facility for The Hartt School. The Performing Arts Center will provide rehearsal halls, studios, performance spaces, and teaching rooms for Hartt students as well as members of the community. We are continuing to raise funds to make this building a reality.

But universities are not judged by bricks and mortar alone. Some of the best advertisements for the quality of our programs come from the achievements of our faculty. Here are just a few:

Jacob Harney, associate professor of biology, and Marissa Cloutier, biology and nutrition instructor, created a new course called Issues of Health and Society: Weighing In. The course evaluated the causes and consequences of obesity in children. Harney and Cloutier’s course model was selected for publication by Science Education for New Civic Engagements and Responsibilities (SENCER) and was featured at the National SENCER Summer Institute.

Gene Gort, associate professor of media arts, and Ken Steen, associate professor of composition and theory, teamed with Jeffrey Krieger ’85, principal cellist in the Hartford Symphony Orchestra, to premiere a multimedia project titled Reliquary of Labor that was commissioned for the opening of new facilities at the New Britain Museum of American Art. Gort and Steen received a prestigious MacDowell Colony Fellowship and residency to develop the project, which was also supported by the Edward C. and Ann T. Roberts Foundation, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Rockefeller Foundation.

Faculty within the College of Engineering, Technology, and Architecture started the Clean Energy Institute. Subhash Chandra, director of the institute, and Thomas Filburn, assistant director and assistant professor in mechanical and biomedical engineering, will lead students and faculty in developing solutions to Connecticut’s energy challenges. On campus we have begun using solar energy panels on the roof of Lincoln Theater to generate nearly 10 percent of the building’s electrical needs.

And speaking of energy, our students’ accomplishments are creating quite a buzz of their own. Michelle Jarzyniecki ’06, a

Amanda Carlson, assistant professor of art history, received a Greenberg Junior Faculty Research Grant last year. Carlson’s grant will provide a reduced teaching load and funding for travel to Nigeria to continue her studies of a secret organization called the Leopard Society.
Goal! Thanks to the more than 800 donors who gave to the Home Field Advantage (HFA) project, the University has refurbished the Al-Marzook soccer/lacrosse field and built new baseball and softball fields. We exceeded our $6.6 million goal for Phase 1 of HFA, including a $700,000 challenge grant from The Kresge Foundation. Tom and Suzy Reich pledged more than $2 million, the lead gift to the project.

Science Education. Joshua Tagore, a sophomore at University High School of Science and Engineering, testified before a U.S. Senate subcommittee last March on the need for more federal education support in math, science, and technology. U.S. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd (D-Conn.) invited Tagore to Washington, D.C.

If She Dances Today...

The outstanding reputation of The Hartt School includes Hartt’s Community Division, which offers classes in music, dance, and theatre to children and adults throughout central Connecticut. Watching her teacher is Anastasia Morales, a student in Children’s Ballet I, one of the classes held in Hartt’s new facility in Simsbury, Conn.
A Beloved Professor.
The University suffered a major loss with the death in March of renowned jazz saxophonist and faculty member Jackie McLean. Jackie taught for more than 30 years at The Hartt School, and many of his students kept in touch long after graduating.

Mark Goodell ‘08 and Chris Heerema ’06 were interns in Torino, Italy, last winter, helping NBC broadcast the Olympics.

Our student-athletes are also accomplishing great things. Overall, they continue to excel in the classroom as well as on the fields and courts. Here is a little-recognized fact: the average GPA of our student-athletes and their graduation rates are higher than those of our student body as a whole.

Last March our women’s basketball team emerged among the final 32 teams playing in the NCAA Division I Women’s Basketball Tournament for the first time. After capturing their third America East Conference title in five years, the Hawks upset Temple University, 64-58, for the first NCAA tournament win in school history. Coach Jennifer Rizzotti, who has signed a contract extension through 2010, has set her sights on reaching the Sweet 16 in the 2007 NCAA tournament.

On the men’s side, the campus is excited about the hiring of Dan Leibovitz as our new men’s basketball head coach. As the top assistant coach at Temple, he played a key role in guiding the team to five NCAA tournaments and two Elite Eight appearances, among other postseason achievements. I’m confident that we will enjoy success under Dan’s leadership.

It has been an exciting time to be at the University, with one sad note: we suffered a terrible loss this past spring with the death of Jackie McLean, legendary jazz musician and faculty member, and the founder and inspirational leader of what we now call the Jackie McLean Institute of Jazz. For more than 30 years Jackie taught generations of jazz students in The Hartt School. His classes on African American history and culture were among the most popular campuswide. Jackie’s impact on this University is immeasurable.

Just as Jackie built upon the legacy of The Hartt School, leading it in new directions, the University has built upon the legacy established in 1957 by the merging of the Hartford Art School, Hillyer College, and the Hartt College of Music. I think our founders would agree with me that we have stayed true to the vision that guided the creation of the University of Hartford: to serve the educational needs of our community.

Today we are a university of nearly 8,000 students (including our two magnet schools), offering more than 125 degree and certification programs within seven schools and colleges. Our reputation as a midsized university that offers excellent faculty and many of the opportunities of a larger institution has spread. Our students now come to us not just from the Hartford area but from across the country and more than 60 other nations.

As we prepare to mark the 50th anniversary of our charter as a university in February 2007, we can look back at our many achievements over the last five decades with pride. At the same time, we must also look forward and determine what we will accomplish in the future. I am convinced that we have developed the right formula to ensure that this institution remains vibrant and successful over the next 50 years and beyond. I hope we can count on your continued support to help us reach our goals.

Graduate Studies.
Calida Jones expects to receive her Master of Music in Violin Performance from The Hartt School in 2007. The University is placing a new emphasis on our graduate programs, an area with the potential for significant growth.
Alumni, parents, faculty and staff, and friends of the University made 13,800 gifts and pledges during the 2005–06 academic year, contributing more than $13.5 million, an increase of more than 20 percent over last year. This brings our Campaign of Commitment total to $136.7 million. Thanks to all of you who made a gift. We sincerely appreciate your support.
A Powerful Catalyst in Our Equation

Dear Friends,

It’s impossible to walk around this campus and not feel the energy in the air. New construction is everywhere; students are excelling in the classroom and in the community; and our faculty are winning awards and national recognition. Your support helps make our formula work, and the evidence is clear.

Alumni, friends, and organizations have responded to our momentum, enabling us to meet our financial goals. We raised more than $13.5 million in gifts and contributions, an increase of 20.4 percent over last year. The Campaign of Commitment total is now $136.7 million. More than half of the almost 8,000 donors were our own alumni. And we welcomed nearly 700 new alumni donors, which tells us they like what they’re seeing at their alma mater.

We completed Phase I of the Home Field Advantage project in September. The total exceeded our $6.6 million goal and included a $700,000 Kresge Foundation challenge grant. Thanks to the generosity of our donors, baseball has returned to campus for the first time in more than 20 years.

The University has raised $3.5 million of the $5 million needed to build The Renée Samuels Center at the Hartford Art School. The new center, a 15,000-square-foot addition to Taub Hall, will provide the media arts and photography departments with the space to fully explore digital technology as an artistic medium.

The addition will also include expanded and renovated areas for traditional disciplines like painting and printmaking and for students to engage one another.

The University is actively raising funds for the new Performing Arts Center. With your help, this project will serve our extraordinarily talented students in The Hartt School as well as the Greater Hartford community.

Please use the enclosed, postage-paid envelope to send your gift of support to our remarkable University. Your contribution can be directed to a specific area, including one of our building projects, a particular college, the University’s Annual Fund, the General Scholarship Fund or another of our many scholarship funds, or to other programs at the University of Hartford.

The following pages contain the names of people and organizations that have made a commitment to the future of the University of Hartford. Thank you to all. You are already making a difference in the lives of our students and our community.

Ways of Giving

Giving can take a variety of forms, and careful planning can help maximize the advantages to you and to the University. Through planning and commitment, you can make a lasting difference in the future of the University and its students.

CASH

Cash payments to the University provide significant benefits for the University and immediate tax savings for the donor. Like other forms of giving, gifts of cash are available for immediate use by the University or may be directed by the donor to benefit the University’s endowment. Checks should be made payable to the University of Hartford.

GIFTS OF SECURITIES

Gifts of appreciated stock and mutual funds can be a wonderful alternative to cash. If you have owned the shares for more than one year, you get the double tax benefit of (1) a charitable deduction based on the fair market value of the securities and (2) the avoidance of capital gains taxes.

For more information or assistance in making a gift of securities, contact Linda Stathers in the Advancement Services Office at 860.768.2437.

MATCHING GIFTS

Many businesses have programs that match the personal gifts made by employees, retirees, and family members to educational institutions. This is an easy way to enhance the impact of your gift. Information on your company’s matching gift program is usually available at your human resources department.

BEQUESTS

You may make a bequest to the University by indicating either a specific amount or a percentage of your residual estate. If you already have a will, you may make a provision for the University by creating a codicil.

LIFE INCOME GIFTS

Charitable gift annuities and remainder trusts are gift plans that provide you or another beneficiary with an income stream, often for life. You benefit with a current income tax deduction, a source of income, and capital gains tax avoidance, and the University receives the principal in the end.

A GIFT WITH FUNDS THAT ARE RETURNED TO YOU OR PASS TO YOUR LOVED ONES

You can make a gift of cash or other assets through an arrangement that will provide the University with annual gifts over a specified period and then pass the gift principal to your heirs. Alternatively, you can elect to have the gift principal returned to you. These creative gift plans offer valuable income and estate tax savings, depending upon which type you choose.

IRAS AND QUALIFIED RETIREMENT PLANS

Your retirement plan is tax-deferred, meaning that it will be taxed—as it is withdrawn during your lifetime, in your estate upon death, and in the hands of your heirs—often by as much as 80 cents on the dollar. Designating the University as a beneficiary of your IRA, 403b, 401k, or Keogh plan can ensure that every penny will be used to ensure your legacy.

If you are over the age of 70 1/2, a new law makes it possible for you to transfer IRA assets directly to the University without being included in your taxable income. For more information about this exciting development, please consult your financial advisor and contact our director of planned giving.

LIFE INSURANCE

You may own a life insurance policy that is no longer needed for the purpose for which it was originally purchased. Consider donating such a policy during your lifetime to support your favorite University program. Such a gift offers the donor income and estate tax savings. You may also consider naming the University as a beneficiary of an existing life insurance policy or purchase a new policy as a gift.

REAL ESTATE

Real estate may be given to the University outright, used to fund a life income gift, or transferred to the University in a bargain sale, an arrangement that is part sale to you and part gift to the University. You may also contribute your home to the University and reserve the right to occupy it during your lifetime. Each plan can save you taxes.

TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY

Donating works of art and other noncash assets can be an effective way to support the University. Gifts in kind can be used by the University for educational purposes or sale, or to generate a source of income for the donor or the donor’s loved ones. Special rules apply for reporting gifts of certain property. The responsibility for an official appraisal rests with the donor.

GIVING ONLINE

The University’s secure online giving page is accessible 24 hours a day via our Web site at www.hartford.edu. From the home page, select “Giving to U of H” and look for the “Make a Gift” icons. Information about making a gift by phone or mail is also available. We encourage you to update your personal information when you submit your gift.

To learn more about specific gift plans or to receive sample bequest language, payout rates for life income gifts, or personalized examples of gift benefits, contact Peter H. Congleton, Director of Planned Giving 860.768.2415 congleton@hartford.edu

28  UNIVERSITY OF HARTFORD
Institutional Partnerships and Sponsored Research

The Office of Institutional Partnerships and Sponsored Research (IPSRS) is the lead office on campus for proposal development and postaward management of all grants from private and public sources, and is responsible for the financial management of all grants, cooperative agreements, and contracts. Our mission is to provide assistance to principal investigators in securing/obtaining and managing awards while ensuring proper stewardship of those funds. Recognizing that external funding is critical to advancing professional development, teaching and learning, and scholarly research, IPSRS is committed to assisting and supporting faculty and staff to secure grants that further the mission of the University. Additionally, IPSRS researches and disseminates information on potential funding opportunities, helps with the application process, ensures compliance with University and funder requirements, including federal mandates and University policies, and provides postaward coordination.

Matching gifts made by companies and corporate foundations multiply the impact of individual gifts to the University. If your company has a matching gift program that includes institutions of higher education, please ensure that your gift is matched. Contact your human resources department to obtain a matching gift form, and enhance the power of your contribution to the University of Hartford.

The Founders’ Planned Giving Society

The Founders’ Planned Giving Society is an honorary association of individuals whose planned gifts have already been received or will someday accrue to the University. Planned gifts include bequests made through testamentary devices, such as wills, retirement plans, and revocable trusts, as well as lifetime gifts that provide income payments to donors and their beneficiaries. Life income gifts, such as charitable gift annuities, charitable remainder trusts, and the donor’s lifetime interest in the principal amount of the gift, continue to provide donor with income streams to the donor, with future distributions to the University for its general or specific charitable purposes.

Thoughtful gift planning offers each person the opportunity to make an endowed gift that will continue to help the University for generations to come. Regardless of the method or the amount of the gift-planning arrangement, we are deeply grateful to each and every member of the Founders’ Society and especially appreciative of their thoughtful commitment to the future financial well-being of the University.
